A series of wildfires in Washington, Oregon, and California are now being considered arson – and sources tell Law Enforcement Today that they may be part of a “coordinated attack”. Law enforcement throughout the west coast is reportedly being put on alert to look out for “opportunists” and those who may have more sinister motives. A number of arsonists are already in jail, and there a few on the run, we’re told. Federal law enforcement sources also tell Law Enforcement Today. that some of the people who started the fires may be connected in some way.

A federal law enforcement source shared with Law Enforcement Today that the feds are looking into whether the cases are linked together... and warn there could be more “attacks”. “We are reacting to a coordinated series of attempts to start fires anywhere and everywhere in Oregon. Public and Private lands, incorporated and unincorporated areas. By all indications so far in the preliminary stages of these investigations there is a coordinated effort on the part of these individuals to start fires in areas that are the least protected and most vulnerable then slowing working their way into more populated areas and neighborhoods. Please take this information as an advisory for you own account and welfare and please act in good faith with due diligence to plan accordingly for your own safety and the well being of your community.”

There are current concerns and allegations that many of these people who have started fires may be related to Antifa. However, these allegations have not be confirmed. Law enforcement sources throughout Oregon and California did confirm for us that investigations are underway to see if a number of these fires are tied together. We’ll be sure to keep you updated as new information becomes available.

While these are anonymous sources – and nothing has been confirmed on record – it is not out of the realm of possibility. Frankly, if you are willing to burn down businesses in a downtown area, what is to say you would not set the woods on fire? This could also be those for whom burning businesses down is too “hardcore” or for those who are too afraid of getting caught. There is a much lower threshold to convince yourself to set the forest on fire, where you can be more anonymous and the risk of getting caught is significantly lower.
